UNIV. PRESIDENT TALKS.

In industrial lines and the wonderful changes in the state due to these. Then, however, after telling of these great works being accomplished, he impressed the necessity for even greater activities along industrial lines if the danger of impoverishing the soils and resources of our country as predicted by scientists is to be averted. This danger, he says, is more real in this country than elsewhere because our methods of utilizing our great resources tend in this direction rather than against it, for the development thus far has been chiefly the tapping of virgin fields, where the old countries are building up their resources constantly.

State Field Worker Speaks

L. P. Harrington, state field worker, also showed the success that has already accompanied these attempts, such as the agricultural work furnished in the gardens supported by many places. These places give the boys and girls a good chance to spend their spare time profitably, for they have the products for home use or for sale. As he says, it can not be expected that all will be kept in this sort of work, but its chief value lies in that it offers an opportunity for all who have such inclinations and will make a success in that sort of work, while the others have just as great chances for training in whatever line of endeavor they may choose to follow. Because of this the country schools must be made just as good in their way as the city schools are in what they teach, and a great deal will have been done toward checking the drift of population from the country to the city.

Instruction in Primary Work

Some of the most effective work of the institute has been accomplished by Miss Shearer of Portland, who has given valuable instruction in the teaching and handling of primary pupils. A novel feature in the instruction was a model primary class of local children, through whom Miss Shearer exemplified the effectiveness and value of the new methods and ideas she represents.

Professor F. C. Ayer of the University of Oregon educational department spoke before the superintendents and principals on the relation of the high school to the college.

A partial list of the dead by towns follows: Thibodaux, 7; Luling, 9; Plaquemine, 1; Madison, 3; Abbeville, 3; St. Rose, 9.

HUERTA NOT TO RESIGN HIS OFFICE

Mexico City, Oct. 23.—President Huerta will not take the trouble to resign before running to succeed himself at Sunday's election, it was stated unofficially today. The Mexican constitution prohibits any one from serving two successive terms as president, but Huerta was said to consider that, by suspending the chamber of deputies, he suspended the constitution. It was reported that if he turned over his office to anyone else, no matter how seemingly loyal to him, he might have trouble.

Washington, Oct. 23.—At the same time that they tacitly admitted displeasure at the British attitude in Mexico, administration officials denied today that they were anything but gratified at the other big nation's view of the situation.

Certain newspapers have attempted to make it appear that the strengthening of Germany's naval force in Mexican waters and the ordering of a French battleship and cruiser to the gulf were slaps at Uncle Sam.

The administration, it was explained, takes a different view. Regarding President Wilson's determination to ignore Huerta, the European powers formally recognized him. Naturally the Washington administration did not like this.

In admitting, by sending men of war to Mexican waters, that the Huerta regime has proven a failure, Germany and France have virtually said that President Wilson was right and they were wrong. It has been intimated, too, that the Berlin and Paris foreign offices are considering withdrawal of their recognition of the Mexican dictator.

How any one can see offense in this to the United States men close to President Wilson said they did not understand.

England's policy, it was agreed, was a different matter. Not only has the London foreign office persisted that it fails to see any reason why it should not have recognized Huerta or for withdrawing recognition now, but the activities of its diplomatic representative, Sir Lionel Carden, in Mexico City continue of such a nature as to threaten actual embarrassment to the Washington government.

The members of the diplomatic corps in Mexico City, it has been well known, were anxious for the United States to intervene in the Mexican situation, but, with the exception of Sir Lionel, who said plainly that he did not think Americans understood conditions there, none has so expressed himself as to imply any international difference of opinion concerning the wisdom of Washington's non-interference policy.

There were some signs of worry in administration circles concerning the meeting of the members of the diplomatic corps in Mexico City, scheduled to be held today, at which it was expected Sir Lionel would figure prominently.

Washington, Oct. 23.—Cipher messages received at the state department reported the Mexican situation extremely serious. President Wilson and Secretary Bryan discussed them this afternoon. It was denied that intervention was under consideration. The administration's attitude would remain unchanged, it was said, at any rate until after Sunday's election. It was added that a statement might be issued next week concerning reports of friction between the United States and England. Admiralty officials said that such an exists is annoying rather than embarrassing.

Vera Cruz, Mex., Oct. 23.—General Felix Diaz today boldly disregarded Provisional President Huerta's order to him to leave Mexico. The situation could not have been more threatening. If Diaz persisted in defying Huerta it was believed another revolution would result.

The former's strongest friends were urging him to obey Huerta. They were prepared to fight if Huerta attempted violence against him, but they feared Huerta might act so suddenly that fighting would not save his life.

Orders Diaz Aboard Gunboat

It was in his capacity as president and commander-in-chief of the army that Huerta ordered Diaz, as a general, aboard the gunboat Zaragosa, to go to Havana. In the event of Diaz' continued refusal to go, it was feared Huerta would have him arrested and shot for disobedience.

Departure from Mexico, however, meant Diaz' definite elimination from the presidential contest. Diaz announced on his arrival that he refused to be eliminated, so he stayed shut up at the home of his brother-in-law, Attorney Alcala.

The members of the party which arrived with him from Havana yesterday day were all under arrest, awaiting court martial at the barracks. There were 12 of them, including three army officers. The three were charged with disobeying Huerta's order to remain in Havana, as was Diaz himself.

Friends of Diaz Arrested

The civilians were held for various alleged offenses. There was not much pretense of making out genuine cases against them. They were arrested simply as friends of Diaz.

Huerta's nominal reason for ordering Diaz to Havana was to accompany Mexican Minister De La Barra to his post in Paris, as a member of his staff.

Diaz' pretended excuse for not going was that he lacked funds for the trip.

Vera Cruz, Mex., Oct. 23.—Sentries were placed today over the home of Felix Diaz' brother-in-law, where he had stayed since his arrival here, and Diaz was warned that if he tried to leave he would be locked in a cell immediately.

EXPLOSION IMPRISONS 247 MEN IN NEW MEXICO

Dawson, N. M., Oct. 23.—With giant ventilating fans forcing fresh air into the gas-filled No. 2 Stag Canyon coal mine as fast as engines will drive them, rescue parties were still working furiously this afternoon to reach the 247 men believed to be imprisoned in the workings as a result of yesterday's explosion.

It was estimated that there were 287 miners at work on the various levels of Number 2 when the explosion occurred. Five men in the upper level got out at once. The rescuers had brought 14 more to the surface by 8 o'clock this morning.

Besides the living men, 23 corpses had been counted.

This afternoon three more survivors were found. To reach the surface with them the rescuers would have had to carry them through several galleries where the air was heavy with poison. In their weakened state it was deemed unsafe to expose them to it, so they were wrapped in blankets and fed and cared for by succeeding shifts of rescuers, as they followed one another into the mine.

It was admitted that there seemed small likelihood of finding any more survivors, but the rescuers were taking no chances. They were determined that every man should be accounted for.

Most of those who still lived were horribly burned. The bodies of the dead were charred beyond recognition. They were left where they lay to remain until searchers had satisfied themselves there were no more still alive to be saved.

Mine officials said that they were hopeful the fans would soon clear the workings of gas. Experts said they were probably right, but that, if there was fire in the mine, the draft would only spread the flames more rapidly.

Until 18 months ago the Number 2 mine was considered one of the safest in the country, the then superintendent, Joseph Smith, insisting on safety appliances ahead of all else.

He was succeeded by a man named McDermott, himself now imprisoned in the mine, who, it is said, allowed much of the safety equipment to fall into disuse.

Dr. Quinlan, general manager of the Phelps-Dodge Company, was reported this morning on his way here on a special train from Douglas, Ariz., with nurses and life-saving apparatus.

New York, Oct. 23.—Cleveland Dodge, vice-president of the Phelps-Dodge Company, owner of the Stag Canyon mine at Dawson, N. M., where several hundred miners are entombed, today declared the mine to be the safest in the United States.

"The mine has a fine system of ventilation and many means of exit," said Dodge. "Unless the miners were trapped, there is a chance that they still are alive. We always have taken every possible anti-accident precaution. Each mine is linked with the others. I feel sure all the entombed men will escape."

T. H. O'Brien, general manager of the mine, telegraphed Dodge that "prospects looked considerably better."

CASE AGAINST BELIS NOT YET DROPPED

Kieff, Russia, Oct. 23.—Though the government was still said to be considering the advisability of dropping the case against Mendel Belis as hopeless, from the prosecution's standpoint, witnesses for the defense were complaining bitterly today of persecution by the local police since they told their stories in the court room.

Ex-Chief Krazovsky of the Kieff secret police, asked the court's protection yesterday, saying detectives had visited his house while he was testifying and questioned his sick wife. Today Katherine Diankonoff gave notice that she had been threatened by a police official. The woman was formerly a friend of Vera Cherbryak, said to be the head of a gang suspected of having killed Andrei Muschinsky, the boy Belis is accused of murdering, because its members believed he knew something of their criminal activities.

Her story on the witness stand was that she visited the Cherbryak home soon after the murder, found everything in disorder and subsequently saw a bundle there which Vera told her contained rags, but which she felt sure was Andrei's corpse.

To Krazovsky's and the Diankonoff woman's pleas for protection the court stated that it lacked authority to act, but advised that the requests be sent to the government at St. Petersburg.

PREHISTORIC MAMMAL DUG UP

Scientists to View Bones Which May Revolutionize Theories.

Scientists from Harvard and Bowdoin are on their way to Great Island, in Quobog bay, to examine the petrified skeleton of a mammoth prehistoric mammal which was discovered a few days ago on the farm of Theodore Bullard, a nephew of President Emeritus Charles W. Elliot of Harvard college, while Mr. Bullard was digging a well. It was found almost intact in what seemed to be a cave about fifteen feet under ground.

Local scientists and Mr. Bullard believe it to be a mammoth Triceratops and say if this is true it will revolutionize scientists' views of the periods which different species of animals occupied and will be of worldwide interest. Two horses were used to pull what is believed to be a mammoth skull from the well. This alone weighs 500 pounds and measures six feet long and the skull is 4 feet high.

Tom Booth and F. L. Smith returned Wednesday from Eugene, where they have been working.
